DhammaJàta is provided as a gift of Dhamma (Dhammadàna) for the welfare and happiness of all with no commercial intention or mass distribution. It is meant for free distribution for private and education usage only. No one should use whole or any part of these materials in any commercial related work or mass distribution.

The resources of the DhammaJàta comprise of:-

- compiler own work;
- compiler teachers, preceptor and other venerable work;
- sources from free media;
- devotees work;
- downloaded from the websites with specific express consent at the time of download.

Compiler does not claim copyright on any work not belongs to compiler. All the copyright not belongs to compiler remain with the respective copyright owner.

Compiler tries its best to exercise due care and caution to ensure all the media compiled do not breach any person's copyright. Compiler does not have any intention in breaching other copyright, if any.

Every effort has been made to trace the copyright holders. Compiler apologizes for any unintentional omissions and would be pleased, in any such cases, to add an acknowledgement or remove from the media in future editions upon notification.

The only and universal copyright holder of the Dhamma (The teaching of the Buddha) in this compilation is the Supreme Buddha. The eternal truths that emanated from the Supremely Enlightened tongue of the Buddha do not recognize and ephemeral copyright requirements stipulated by mere wording worldlings.

Compiler welcomes any inputs or suggestions to improve compiler work. Please feel free to contact compiler by email:
